Resolve, Respect, Recognition represents our 57-year battle against gillnets on the mainstream Columbia River. Due to our Resolve, we've finally achieved a nearly six-decade fight for an equal share of the Columbia River harvest. Along with that allocation comes a better future for wild salmon and steelhead in the Columbia River basin. With the most significant non-selective method of harvest largely removed from the mainstream Columbia, wild spring Chinook, wild Coho and wild steelhead have a fighting chance for recovery in our region. We have earned the Respect and Recognition as a community, not willing to falter until we achieve what's best for the resource

Call for Volunteers! Steelhead Fishing 101 Workshop – November 5th and 11th

Please mark your calendars for Sunday, November 5th (note new date) and Saturday, November 11th, for the next Steelhead Fishing 101 Workshop the Chapter puts on in partnership with the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife. The workshop will be held at the Glenn Otto Community Park in Troutdale. I need instructors and mentors (you know who you are). I also need assistant volunteers. Are you a new member new to steelhead fishing? Or, a past graduate of a workshop? Volunteer as an assistant as this is an excellent opportunity to learn by helping at no cost!

The time commitment is all day (preferred) on November 5th and a half day on November 11th. There will also be a 3 hour (tops) planning and preparation meeting from 11:00 am to 2:00 pm on Sunday, October 22nd. Location to be determined. This meeting will be especially important for Instructors and Mentors.

Contact Jim Cathcart, Angler Education Director, at (503) 238-4775, ext. 106 or email at ornavigator@hotmail.com.

One Last Cast

Jim Cathcart (aka Navigator)

What does it mean that steelhead are a fish of 1000 casts? Patience and persistence. Tenacity. River fishing for Coho salmon – especially on the Sandy or Clackamas River – can be a fish of 10,000 casts. Coho are notorious for lock jaw and simply not biting in fresh water. This can be incredibly frustrating – tons of rolling fish presenting themselves -- and nothing, I mean nothing, gets bit. But, every so often, Coho bite. Like a good golf shot; that is what keeps me coming back to the game. In fact, on one trip, I eagled and caught a limit of 3 hatchery Coho salmon on just 5 casts! Spinners.

I have tried to keep a mental note as to what conditions are present when riven Coho bite. Here are my anecdotal observations. First, the Coho are on the move. That means the river has come up, is on the drop, and fish are moving through. In smaller tributaries, like Eagle Creek (Clackamas River system), you can see the fish move. In groups. This is a good sign. Get something in front of them and they are likely to hit it. Second, the fish are not pressured. The usual saying is never leave fish to find fish. Not true with river Coho. Fish that are stacked up in holes, rolling like crazy, waiting for the next rain, contain few, if any biters. Especially if there is a crowd. Move.

Third, when you move, look for less fished or overlooked areas. Even in low water, the Coho move upriver and they can be found between the classic holes. Make casts to small buckets of holding water in riffles and runs; spots that are away from the crowds. Cover water, stay active. Make a lot of casts because you need to get to 10,000! If the return numbers are high, your chances of reward are that much greater. Fourth. Change colors, sizes, and techniques. Go small, but don't overlook big. Just keep changing it up. My last Coho, caught on October 5th on the Sandy River was caught this way. I was fishing below Cedar Creek during the week and was the first to the Meat Hole – even though it was midafternoon. The river was low -7.9feet at the Bull Run gauge. It was a beautiful sunny day. The crisp of the fall season in the air. Spinners did not produce. Bobber and bait did not produce. I had bought some twitching jigs a couple of years back and my plan was to try them if my go to's did not work. (It helped that the program at the Sandy River Chapter Membership Meeting the night before was on twitching jigs by our very own Jeff Stoeger). The jig I picked was a ½ ounce, Coho Madness, by John's Jigs. Purple with a pink worm. On just the 5th cast, the jig got hammered. The fish was hot, mad and bright. A hatchery keeper. It happens.
